Prologue

WHEN THE VICTORIOUS ARMY of the Ohio, Major-General Don Carlos Buell commanding, swept down into North Alabama in early April, 1862 several thousand citizens who held little or no devotion to the Confederate States of America, rallied around the invaders for aid and comfort.¹ Huntsville, which was occupied by 8,000 troops of the Third Division and was designated as military headquarters, soon became the center of activities disloyal to the South.²

Variouslly described as "Unionists," "Loyalists," "Tories," "Mossbacks" or "Conscripts," the disaffected were for one reason or another revolting against Confederate authority. Some, no doubt, were sincere in their allegiance to the Union. Others were in all probability opportunists whose loyalties shifted with the fortunes of war. Nevertheless, in mid-1862, as their own little, hilly, red-clay farms were fast becoming Federally-occupied territory, they found it neither difficult nor unprofitable publicly to profess their devotion to Old Glory.

In the North the Tories were hailed as "the abused and persecuted" and citizens' meetings were held in their honor,³ but among their fellow Southerners they were known as "mountain whites" or, to use a modern term, "hillbillies," a poor, often underprivileged people who had long been isolated on their rocky highlands, suspicious of intruders and generally antisocial. Blindly hating the affluent slave-holder and his "nigger" alike, they had first refused to support the cause of secession and, afterwards, ignored all Confederate civilian and military conscription laws. Forming themselves into bands of so-called "Destroying Angels" or "Prowling Brigades," they occasionally swept down out of their piney-wood strongholds to raid their more fortunate neighbors in the valleys. Not infrequently, they burned cotton, gin-houses, jails, county court records, public buildings, and dwellings, willy-nilly "confiscating" food and other properties as they went. By their depredations thousands of Confederate sympathizers were driven from their homes—some to be stripped and whipped by the marauding guerillas and not a few to be murdered or raped. Even to the Union conquerors, their so-called friends, the Tories were sometimes "as vicious as copper-heads." And, as one Confederate colonel, who had captured a small band of them in the Tennessee Valley, wrote his commander, "They are the most miserable, ignorant, poor, ragged devils I ever saw."⁴ As early as July 16, 1862 Colonel Abel D. Streight, of the Fifty-first Indiana Volunteers, then stationed at Mooresville, Alabama, described them as the "mostly poor" who "came into our lines begging [for] protection and a chance to defend the flag of our country." He added, "the tale of suffering and misery, as told by each as they arrived, was in itself a lamentable history of the deplorable position of the Union people of the South."⁵

Altogether, in North Alabama there were thousands of Tories—it is impossible to determine the exact number. Brigadier-General Gideon J. Pillow reported in September, 1862 that at least ten thousand, including some who had deserted from the Confederate Army, were hiding out in the hills. Seven months later General Gustave T. Beauregard received word that North Alabama was "full of Tories," and that in late 1862 they had actually held a large "convention" in the region of Winston, Fayette, and Marion counties at which they had voted, while wildly waving United States flags, to remain "neutral." In the spring of 1863 a similar convention was held in Winston County and in 1864 a Confederate officer wrote Beauregard that in Lawrence, Winston, and Blount counties Federal recruiting agents were carrying on open correspondence with many disloyal citizens. There was no doubt in his mind that to these "Alabama Yankees" neutral meant supporting the Union.⁶ Colonel Streight, who praised their courage in the face of the great odds, wrote that their "examples of patriotism . . . are worthy of being followed."

One old lady, Mrs. Anna Campbell [Streight continued], volunteered to ride thirty-five miles, and return, making seventy miles, with about thirty recruits, inside of thirty-six hours. When it is taken into consideration that these people were all hid away to avoid being taken by the rebels, and that the country is but sparsely settled, this case is without a parallel in American history. There are many cases of a similar nature that came under my observation, but I do not desire to weary your patience with them. Suffice it to say, that I have never witnessed such an outpouring of devoted and determined patriotism among any other people; and I am now of the opinion that, if there could be a sufficient force in that portion of the country to protect these people, there could be at least two full regiments raised of as good and true men as ever defended the American flag. So confident am I that my views are correct, that if the Commanding General will grant me permission to do so, I will take my regiment, (the boys all want to go,) and two weeks' rations of bread, salt, sugar and coffee, (meat we can get there,) and five hundred extra stand of arms, with a sufficient supply of ammunition, and locate at least thirty miles south of Decatur, where I will rally around me a sufficient number of the brave mountaineers to protect the country effectually against anything except the regular rebel army, who, by the way, would find it a difficult country to operate in. Never did people stand in greater need of protection. They have battled manfully against the most unscrupulous foe that civilized warfare has ever witnessed. They have been shut out from all communication with any thing but their enemies for a year and a half, and yet they stand firm and true. If such merit is not to be rewarded, if such citizens are not to receive protection, then is their case a deplorable one indeed.⁷

Mostly, the disaffected were from the North Alabama counties south of the Tennessee River—Winston, Marion, Walker, Franklin, Fayette, Blount, Madison, Morgan, St. Clair, Lawrence, Marshall, Jefferson, Limestone, Randolph, St. Clair, Tuscaloosa, Cherokee, and Jackson—counties which (1) grew less cotton, (2) held fewest slaves and (3) without exception had sent Cooperationist delegates to the Alabama Secession Convention of January, 1861. That is, at the polls they had voted their preference for somehow compromising with the North rather than seceding and thus inviting the possibility of armed conflict (see Table A).⁸

Nor is this difficult to understand. In 1860 Alabama's population numbered 964,201, of which only 526,431 (54.59 per cent) were white, 435,080 (45.12 per cent) slave blacks and 2,690 free blacks and Indians. The blacks were owned by only 33,730 whites (6.21 per cent)—an average of 13 per slaveholder—and these were mainly concentrated in the cotton-growing counties of South Alabama. The other 492,701 whites owned not a single slave (see Table B).

⁷ Rebellion Record, V, 284.

* Population of the United States in 1860 [8th Census] (Washington, 1864), 8. The 2,690 free blacks includes 160 Indians.

Of the 16 counties whose population was less than 25 per cent slave, 13 were in North Alabama and three (Covington, Coffee, and Dale) in the Wiregrass Region of Southeast Alabama, where the soil was not particularly suited to the cultivation of cotton; of the 19 counties whose slave population was more than 50 per cent, 17 were in South Alabama and two (Limestone and Madison) in the Tennessee Valley, both areas ideally conducive to cotton culture (see Table B). To be specific, the North Alabama county of Winston, which contained only 122 slaves (3.41 per cent of its total population) and which grew only 352 bales of cotton in 1860, was so pro-Union in sentiment as to threaten to secede from Alabama, if Alabama seceded from the Union. Even now the county is frequently referred to as the "Free State of Winston."⁹ Blount County's slave population was only 666 (6.13 per cent), Walker's 519 (6.50 per cent), DeKalb's 484 (7.92 per cent), and Randolph's 1,904 (9.49 per cent) and, in total, the four counties produced only 11,762 bales of cotton in 1860, as contrasted with 64,428 produced by Marengo County alone. Small wonder that, as war came in early 1861, Confederate authorities were gravely disturbed by the threat of several North Alabama counties to join with counties in East Tennessee and North Georgia in forming a new Union State of Nickajack.¹⁰

On the contrary, the South Alabama counties of Marengo, Dallas, Greene, Sumter, and Wilcox, where the soil was especially suited to cotton culture, had slave populations ranging from 24,409 (78.31 per cent) to 17,797 (72.29 per cent) and produced an average of 53,801 400-lb. bales per county in 1860.

Needless to add, the political sentiment of these heavy cotton-growing counties was unanimously in favor of immediate and straight-out secession from the Union.¹¹ Indeed, in the Secession Convention the Cooperationist sentiment prevailed in almost the exact ratio that it had in the state-wide election of delegates the month before.¹² When the final ballot was cast on January 11, 39 out of 100 delegates voted against the Ordinance of Secession—almost two out of five (see Table C). And seven of the 61 affirmative votes were cast by delegates who had been elected to the convention as Cooperationists—three each from Coosa and Talladega counties and one from Madison County. Had these seven not bolted their party, the vote against secession would have been 46-64—precisely the same as the test vote which on the first day of the convention had elected Secessionist William M. Brooks (of South Alabama's Perry County) president of the convention over his Cooperationist opponent, Robert Jemison, Jr. (of North Alabama's Tuscaloosa County).

¹⁰ Moore, 421; Fleming, 111; Denman, 149.

Despite their opposition to secession from the Union, as evidenced by the popular vote of December 24, 1860 and the convention vote of January 11, 1861, the fact remains that, once the die was cast, the great majority of Alabamians remained loyal to their state and to the South. With few exceptions even the Cooperationists—those who had propagandized and debated and voted against the Ordinance of Secession—became devoted Confederates at last. Indeed, only three of the Cooperationist delegates to the Secession Convention deserted to the North—Jeremiah Clemens (Madison County), Charles C. Sheets (Winston County), and David P. Lewis (Lawrence County). Of these, Sheets was the most consistent: he voted against secession and he refused to sign the ordinance. Lewis likewise voted nay, but he later signed the document (as did 14 others).

1863. The first Florida Cavalry, U.S.A., a bushwhacking organization led by one Joseph Sanders, was notorious for its depredations. In the last months of the war the Alabama legislature authorized the formation of "Home Guards," composed of old men and boys, and these captured and hanged many of the Tories (see Fleming, 122-124).

Compiled from William R. Smith, The History and Debates of the Convention of the People of Alabama . . . [January, 1861] . . . (Montgomery, 1861), 21-22, 118.

(*Figures in parenthesis represent the number of delegates from each county.)

Clemens, the least consistent, vigorously opposed it but signed it, nevertheless. Shortly afterwards, the three men deflected to the Union. Sheets was arrested as a traitor. (In 1872 and 1874 he represented Alabama in Congress.) Lewis quit Alabama and lived out the war in hiding in Tennessee. (In 1872-1874 he returned and was elected Scalawag governor of Alabama.) And the traitorous Clemens, after accepting the office of major-general in the militia of the Republic of Alabama, slipped away to Pennsylvania where he conducted a vicious pamphleteering and speaking campaign against his native state. (Immediately after Appomattox he returned to North Alabama, but died within a month.)¹³

In the final analysis, however, the firmest demonstrable test of the loyalty of Alabamians to the Union may be reflected in their willingness to bear arms in its support. According to the official Compendium of the War of the Rebellion. . . ,¹⁴ only 2,678 Alabama white men actually enlisted in the United States Army, 1861-1865. Of these, 345 (339 men, 6 officers) lost their lives—killed, 50; died of disease, 228; died as prisoners, 22; died of accidents, 5; and died of other non-battle causes, 40.¹⁵ Many of the soldiers served in miscellaneous Northern companies, mostly Indiana and Tennessee,¹⁶ but the large majority—2,066, as nearly as may be ascertained¹⁷—saw service in the First Alabama Cavalry, the only white Union regiment from the state and the subject of this study.

This is not to suggest that the day-by-day service record per se of the First Alabama Cavalry, U. S. A., justifies its being singled out for monographic treatment. In fact, a ¹⁴ Ed. by Frederick H. Dyer (Des Moines, 1908), hereinafter Compendium.

¹⁶ For the sake of clarity, another unit, the Tennessee-Alabama First Vidette Cavalry, which contained some Alabamians, should be mentioned. Reported in the Compendium (34, 231, 664-665, 1642) as a Tennessee regiment, it was not organized until Sept. 10, 1863-Apr. 14, 1864 (at Stevenson-Bridgeport, Ala. and Tracy City-Nashville, Tenn.) and was mustered out nine months later, June 16, 1864. Its brief history includes only incidental skirmishes at Larkinsville, Beersheba Springs, and Sand Mountain, Ala., Sept. 26 [28], Nov. 26, and Dec. 26, 1863 (ORA, 1, XXX-XXXII, passim). Still another regiment, not mentioned in the Compendium, but misleadingly cited in ORA (1, XLV, 637-639) as "Alabama Troops," was [John B.] Kennamer's Scouts. In reality, this was nothing more than a company of thirty-odd renegade "home-guards" attached to the Fourth Michigan and the Thirteenth Wisconsin regiments for a very short time.

close examination of its chronology reveals otherwise—that by comparison with hundreds of other Union regiments it was not conspicuous in either accomplishments or attitudes. True enough, General William T. Sherman selected the unit as his “headquarters escort” in the march to the sea,¹⁸ but mostly it was employed in scouting, recruiting, raiding, and guarding the flanks. Only rarely in its three years of existence was it engaged in actual combat with the enemy.

Nevertheless, it may be safe to suppose that the very existence of the First Alabama Cavalry entitles it to special consideration. First, it was doubtless typical of the 85 Southern white regiments whose members voluntarily chose to fight against rather than with their own compatriots during the War Between the States—Alabama, 1; Arkansas, 10; Florida, 2; Georgia, 1; Louisiana, 10; Mississippi, 1; North Carolina, 4; South Carolina, 0; Tennessee, 51; Texas, 4; and Virginia, 1.¹⁹ And, second, so far as this writer has been able to discover, this study of the First Alabama Cavalry is also unique in that it is the only one ever undertaken of a Northern regiment composed of white Southerners.

As has been stated, 2,066 men joined the First Alabama Cavalry, U. S. A., at one time or another.²⁰ Of these, the birthplaces were recorded for only 1,432 (those for 634 were unrecorded), as follows:

¹⁸ Grenville M. Dodge, The Battle of Atlanta and Other Addresses . . . (Council Bluffs, 1910), 115.

¹⁹ Compendium, 21-34, 997ff. In addition to the 85, there were 49 regiments of “African Descent,” making a total of 134 regiments. However, five or six of these were never fully organized or were transferred prior to complete organization.

It will be noted that almost exactly one-half of the 1,432 men whose birthplaces were recorded were native Alabamians. Using the same ratio, it may be assumed that one-half of the 634 men whose birthplaces were unrecorded were also native Alabamians, thus hypothetically bringing the total to 1,029 out of 1,432, or 72 per cent. Moreover, in the light of the ante-bellum westward migration trend, it is not unreasonable to reckon that an additional several hundred enlistments were living in Alabama in 1862-1865, even though they had been born in Georgia, Tennessee, Virginia, or the Carolinas. Altogether, therefore, it may be concluded that at least 75 per cent of the 2,066 men were residents of the state at the time they joined the regiment.

Of the 2,066 enlistments 1,987 are identifiable by dates and places (79 are unidentifiable), as follows:

During the 3-year service of the First Alabama Cavalry 279 men deserted and 88 were captured by the Confederates.²² When the regiment was deactivated at Huntsville on October 20, 1865, only 397 remained to be discharged.

This study is based almost entirely upon primary source materials, particularly The War of the Rebellion: A Compilation of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies (Washington, 1880-1901), 128 volumes, A Compendium of the War of the Rebellion . . . (Des Moines, 1908), 1796pp., and the collection of original manuscript records of the First Alabama Cavalry Volunteers, U. S. A., on deposit in the National Archives, Washington, as Record Group No. 94, Records of the Office of the Adjutant General, a microcopy (No. 263, 11 reels) of which is in the University of Alabama Library.²³ The manuscript "Compiled Service Records" consists of hundreds of jackets or envelopes, each containing the record (often incomplete) of a soldier—name, place, and date of birth, occupation, enlistment, rank, company (or companies),²⁴ separation from service (with reason), and certain other data relating solely to that particular individual. In addition, the files contain monthly "Records of Events" and "Regimental Returns," written in camp or field, various reports, some personal correspondence and not infrequent notices of discharges, desertions, and deaths. All of this material has been carefully "carded," arranged and indexed alphabetically under the soldiers' surnames (see Chapter II, pp. 53ff.). The whole is described as "The Compiled Service Records of Volunteer Union Soldiers Who Served in Organizations from the State of Alabama: First Alabama Cavalry."²⁵

In making this book I have become deeply indebted to three of my colleagues in the University of Alabama Library—Mrs. Addie Shirley Coleman, Mrs. Joyce Haguewood

Flint, Co. E, mentions the First Alabama Cavalry only incidentally.

CHAPTER I

Chronology of the Regiment

THE EARLIEST OFFICIAL MENTION of the "volunteers from Alabama," who were later to compose the First Alabama Cavalry, U. S. A., appeared in Special Orders No. 100, issued by Major-General Don Carlos Buell at "Headquarters Army of the Ohio, Huntsville, July 12, 1862." The day before, Colonel James B. Fry, chief-of-staff, had written Major-General George H. Thomas at Tuscumbia:

Some 80 or 90 citizens from [Madison] county about 25 miles south have come in to enlist in our army. As many more are represented as trying to get in but [were] prevented by the rebel cavalry and guerillas. [Brigadier] General [Thomas J.] Wood is today ordered to send a regiment of infantry with the cavalry, without baggage, to cover the approach as such as desire to come in. The regiment will not go more than 25 miles nor be absent more than three or four days.¹

On July 13 Thomas advised Major-General Henry W. Halleck at Corinth, Mississippi that "a good deal of dissatisfaction" had been reported among Confederate troops in his area, causing "desertions . . . from the Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee regiments." Three days later Thomas added that several deserters had come in, all destitute and "many barefooted." By July 18 a sufficient number of Tories had enlisted to justify Buell's issuing Special Orders No. 106:

The volunteers from Alabama will be organized into companies, under the direction of Capt. H. C. Bankhead [of the Fifth U. S. Infantry], who will enroll and muster them into the United States service in accordance with the laws and orders on the subject. Company officers will be selected from among the men and appointed by the general commanding conditional upon the confirmation of the President of the United States. The provost-marshal in Huntsville will give Captain Bankhead such assistance as he may require in this duty. All Alabama men now traveling with any of the regiments of this command will be sent or left at this place.²

Within three weeks Assistant Adjutant-General J. M. Wright, Buell's aide-de-camp, wrote Major W. H. Sidell of the Fifteenth U. S. Infantry and acting assistant aide-de-camp in Nashville, that "Requisitions have been forwarded for a complete supply of Springfield or Enfield rifles and accoutrements for the companies (180 men) of the Alabama Volunteers. Direct the ordnance officer to forward them without delay."³

Meanwhile, throughout the late summer Union recruiting officers combed the hills of North Alabama for additional volunteers. The activities of one such official, a civilian named Joseph Palmer (who had been forced to "flee to the mountains" for murdering a Confederate soldier) have been recorded by one of his recruits, 18-year old Pinckney D. Hall of Franklin, who later became a corporal in Co. B, First Alabama Cavalry. Reminiscing as "A Loyal Southron" in 1899, nearly thirty-five years after the war, Hall declared:

Palmer made his way back to the mountains of Marion and Franklin counties for the purpose of raising a regiment for the United States service. While in our midst a man—Marshall McLoud or McLeod—living in the outer edge of our village [on Bull Mountain Creek, Franklin County], a good spy for the rebels, who kept them around him and harbored them for the purpose of hunting Union men, himself got into trouble. One evening about sunset Palmer assembled nine men, the writer being one of them, armed with rifles, shotguns and two old muskets. We started for McLeod's, a distance of six to eight miles, determined to break up one den of marauders. We arrived on the ground, and found no soldiers there. Palmer, in maneuvering around, routed a gang of sheep in front of McLeod's gate. McLeod stepped out to the gate to see what disturbed the sheep. Palmer was within 10 feet of him, with a good double-barrel shotgun. He tried both barrels of his gun on McLeod, and they failed to fire, only bursting the caps. McLeod was loading wagons to leave, and there were bullet-holes through the door, from the small rifle to the largest musket. There was no more trouble from that quarter. Palmer continued recruiting. In the Autumn of 1862 he had made up a company of cavalry at Camp Glendale, Miss., an outpost for Corinth.⁴

On September 8 Buell ordered the "new" companies of Alabama troops "lately organized at Huntsville" to report "without delay" to Colonel William B. Stokes, commanding the First [Middle] Tennessee Cavalry, a "post force" regiment stationed in Nashville.⁵ Within two or three months, however, the companies were described as the First Alabama Cavalry and assigned to the Army of the Tennessee, Major-General Ulysses S. Grant commanding. At the time, January, 1863, there were only two companies which, with seven regiments of the Sixty-fourth Illinois Cavalry, made up the Third Brigade, Sixteenth Army Corps, District of Corinth. The officers were Major-General Charles S. Hamilton, Brigadier-General Grenville M. Dodge, Major

John W. Stewart, Captain William A. Lord, and Henry T. Sumner, captain of the First Alabama Cavalry.⁶

The "Record of Events" for March—the earliest official "Regimental Field and Staff Returns" from the First Alabama Cavalry—reveals that the unit was then stationed at Glendale, Mississippi:

From the first formation the regt. has been engaged in scouting in N. E. Miss. and owing to the acquaintance, thorough and minute, which a large portion of both officers and men have with the Country, they have been almost universally successful. The first Cos. were formed in Nov. & Dec. 1862 and all have been engaged in continual service, since that time. A portion of the officers as [of this?] report are attached from other regts & Cos. and are not aggregated, not having been dropped on their original rolls. By this direction Co. A loses one, B do, do, D 2, E do. Field and Staff all detached & not aggregated. The Cos. 'C' 'D' 'E' have never been reported on monthly returns before, but are put in column aggregate last monthly return in order to account in summing up for change in other companies.⁷

Throughout the summer of 1863 the headquarters of the First Alabama remained at Glendale, from which the regiment made frequent scouting and foraging expeditions in northern Mississippi and Alabama. Frequent reorganizations, however, resulted in its transfer from one brigade to another. On April 30 it was transferred to Colonel Florence M. Cornyn's Cavalry Brigade and a month later to the Third Brigade (same officers). On August 20 it was attached to the First Brigade, Third Michigan Cavalry, Colonel J. K. Mizner commanding. Besides the seven Alabama companies, this brigade included the Seventh Kansas, ⁶ Ibid., 1, XXIV(3), 20, 27. See Compendium, 997 for a listing of the various military units to which the First Alabama Cavalry was attached, 1862-1865.

⁷ All manuscripts used in this study are in "The Compiled Service Records of Volunteer Union Soldiers Who Served in Organizations from the State of Alabama: First Alabama Cavalry" (in the National Archives, Washington). See above, Prologue, 19, n. 23 for a brief description of these records.

Tenth Missouri, and Fifth Ohio regiments and, of course, the Third Michigan from which the organization drew its name. The brigade was at this time still in the Department of the Tennessee, Sixteenth Army Corps, Major-General Grant commanding; however, on August 31 two unidentified companies of the First Alabama were transferred to the newly-created Department of the Cumberland, Major-General William W. Rosecrans commanding, sent to Camp Spears near Nashville, and placed under Colonel William C. Pickens.

Meanwhile, Rosecrans, eager to cut off all Confederate supply lines leading into Atlanta and Knoxville and thus to seal off Chattanooga, in April had ordered Colonel Abel D. Streight to conduct "an expedition to the interior of Alabama and Georgia, for the purpose of destroying the railroads in that country." Streight's "provisional command for temporary purposes" consisted of about two thousand officers and men "of well-attested pluck and endurance," including the Fifty-first and Seventy-third Indiana, the Third Ohio, the Eightieth Illinois, and two companies of the First Alabama Cavalry, under Captain D. D. Smith—evidently the same two which on August 31 had been transferred from the Department of the Tennessee.⁹ As these cavalymen swept through Moulton, across Sand Mountain, and into the Black Warrior River Valley near Blountsville, Streight wrote: "We are now in the midst of devoted Union people. Many of Captain Smith's men (Alabamians) were recruited near this place, and many were the happy greetings between them and their friends and relatives."¹⁰

⁸ ORA, 1, XXIV (3), 256, 456; 1, XXX (3), 82, 275; 1, XXXI (1), 823.

⁹ Ibid., 1, XXIII (1), 281-285.

As a diversionary aid to Streight, an expeditionary force of the Sixteenth Army Corps, including the main body of the First Alabama Cavalry, commanded by Brigadier-General Dodge, had been ordered to "scour" the countryside for "all the horses and mules that could be found." Encountering the enemy on four occasions (at Bear Creek, Little Bear Creek, Leighton, and Town Creek), the 8000-man detachment captured 40 prisoners, 900 head of horses and mules, 60 bales of cotton, and cattle, sheep and hogs "by the thousands." It destroyed 1,500,000 bushels of corn, eight mills and tan-yards, 60 flatboats on the Tennessee River, broke up ferries from Eastport to Courtland, and took the towns of Tuscumbia and Florence. Wrote Dodge, "Nothing was left in the valley that would in the least aid the enemy."

As agreed, on April 26 Dodge met Streight at Tuscumbia and turned over to him 500 mules and 12 wagons. Dodge agreed to advance down the Decatur road as far as Courtland in hopes of distracting Forrest's cavalry, while Streight rode in the direction of Russellville, Moulton, Sand Mountain, and Blountsville. The two commanders parted on April 28, Streight leaving with Dodge several hundred men who had been declared "not fit for the arduous duties" ahead.¹¹

Returning toward Corinth, Dodge destroyed the railway bridges and telegraph lines between Courtland and Tuscumbia. Altogether, on May 3, he boastfully reported to Major-General Stephen A. Hurlbut, commanding the Sixteenth Army Corps, "[We] rendered useless the garden spot of Alabama for at least one year, besides inflicting a deserved chastisement upon a most unrelenting community of intense rebel sympathizers." Two days later he filed a second and more detailed report of his expedition. In it he praised the First Alabama Cavalry for bravely charging

¹¹ Ibid., 1, XXIII(1), 285. Streight stated that his original command of "about 1,700 officers and men" was thus "reduced to 1,500." Wyeth wrote (187) that Streight had "about two thousand officers and men."

Colonel Phillip D. Roddey's Confederates at Bear Creek (April 17) with unloaded muskets:

Colonel Cornyn hearing firing in the rear, immediately fell back, and, with the First Alabama Cavalry, charged the rebels and retook the artillery and caissons, with the exception of one gun

The charge of the Alabamians with muskets only, and those not loaded, is creditable, especially as they are all new recruits and poorly drilled. In this charge, Captain [James C.] Cameron, the commanding officer of the Alabama cavalry, a deserving and much lamented officer, was killed.

However, Colonel Cornyn, who had been closer to the Alabama Tories in their baptism of fire than his Brigadier-General, was far less complimentary of his half-hearted comrades:

I ordered a charge by the First Alabama Cavalry, which I am sorry to say, was not obeyed with the alacrity it should have been. After charging to within short musket-range of the enemy, they halted for a cause I cannot account for, and the enemy escaped to the woods with one of the pieces and limber of the other, it having been previously thrown down the railroad excavation. Here Captain Cameron was killed, and a private . . . of the First Alabama Cavalry, but not until they had desisted from the charge, when the enemy turned and poured a perfect hail of lead into our ranks.

Two days later, Sunday, April 19, the First Alabama Cavalry was transferred from Cornyn's brigade to that of Colonel Moses M. Bane (Fiftieth Illinois Infantry), which was hiding "in ambush near Buzzard's Roost Creek." For the next week the brigade escorted prisoners and constructed foot-bridges, while now and then firing at the rear guard of Roddey's Confederates. Then, "after four days' marching, during which time nothing worthy of note occurred," Bane wrote, "we reached Corinth about 4 p.m.

Saturday, May 2. Our only casualty was one man of Company B, Seventh Illinois, who shot himself accidentally."¹²

So ended the first brief but inglorious foray of the First Alabama Cavalry, U. S. A. For the month of April the regimental scribe summed up the events in simple confusion, thus:

From Apr 14 to Apr 17 the right was engaged under command of Gen'l Dodge in an expedition toward Decatur, Ala. Was engaged in battle Apr 17 & at other times in skirmishing. From acquaintance with the surface of the country, roads may be very efficient but is improperly armed, with arms unfit for this branch of service.¹³

Upon its return to Glendale and for four months thereafter the activities of the First Alabama were virtually nil, or so the extant "Regimental Returns," very sparse, suggest. For May, June, July, and August they were left completely blank.¹⁴ The September report described the activation of two new companies, H and L—which were "recruited in field"—and Company K, which had been transferred back to the regiment from the First Middle Tennessee. On August 20 the First Alabama was attached to the First Brigade, Sixteenth Army Corps (Army of the Tennessee), under the command of Colonel Mizner. The unit also included the Third Michigan, Seventh Kansas, Tenth Missouri, and Fifth Ohio cavalry regiments. However, within two weeks two of the Alabama companies were transferred to the Army of the Cumberland, Major-General Rosecrans commanding, and with seven companies of the Third

¹² ORA, 1, XXIII(1), 245-250, 253-254, 259-260. Bane's report, dated May 1 at Corinth, was written to Capt. George E. Spencer who, as will be seen below, was later closely identified with the First Alabama Cavalry. In his The Battle of Atlanta and Other Campaigns . . . , 113-114, Dodge praised Spencer for his "genius in getting into the enemy's lines. . . ."

¹³ See above, n. 7.

¹⁴ Ibid., 1, XXX(3), 82 mentions a brief, uneventful foray into Monroe and Fayette counties in May, however.

Tennessee were assigned an "unattached" status under Brigadier-General Alvan C. Gillem and Colonel Pickens.¹⁵

Meantime, in July Captain George E. Spencer, Brigadier-General Dodge's assistant adjutant-general, had asked to be transferred to the First Alabama Cavalry, which up to this time had not had a permanent commander.

The War Department, upon Dodge's recommendation, granted Spencer's request and simultaneously promoted him to the rank of colonel. On September 11, in Corinth, Spencer took formal command of the regiment.¹⁶

In less than a week Colonel Spencer was ordered by Major-General Hurlbut to proceed "through Jasper, Ala., to Montgomery or some point east . . . on the West Point railroad . . . , there to destroy [it and] its rolling stock, track, and depots, doing the most thorough amount of damage possible." Not unmindful of Cornyn's report of the First Alabama's ignoble behavior at Bear Creek, Hurlbut added, "You will see to it that your men are kept together and thoroughly in hand [They] will be carefully instructed not to interfere with private property further than is necessary for [sustenance]. . . ."

The First Alabama did not "move out" until mid-October, however. Meanwhile, the regiment whiled the weeks away by making short, inconsequential raids on the countryside, recruiting more "Alabama Yankees," training, and by preparing to move Brigadier-General Dodge's headquarters from Glendale to Camp Davies, near Corinth, Mississippi.¹⁷

¹⁵ Ibid., 1, XXIV(3), 298; XXX(3), 275; 1, XXXI(1), 92, 97. See below, n. 22. The Rebellion Record . . . , VIII, 7, quoting the Chicago Tribune, stated that on Sept. 14 ten Tories brought in five prisoners and 110 recruits in the vicinity of Glendale.

Fully confident of Spencer's ability, Hurlbut wrote Ulysses S. Grant, his so-called "general-in-chief," as follows:

Colonel Spencer's regiment is wholly composed of refugees from Alabama. They have been in several engagements and behaved well. They are thoroughly acquainted with the country, well mounted and armed; have two light steel guns, take with them as volunteers 6 engineers who can either run or destroy railroads or steamers. The expedition is directed against the West Point Railroad, because it is a connecting link of great importance and of a different gauge from the other southern roads. Spencer is certain that he can get through the outer cordon without observation and if he does so, I am satisfied he will make his way to Montgomery.¹⁸

On the twentieth the First Alabama Cavalry, "a force of about 650 men," moved out of Corinth, directly southeastward, towards Columbiana, Alabama—its first responsibility to destroy the railroad from Line Station to Elyton, a new line being built "for the sole purpose of getting out the railroad iron now being manufactured at these mills." Forty miles out of Glendale, however, at Jones's Crossroads, the regiment was attacked by 2,000 Confederates, commanded by Brigadier-General Samuel W. Ferguson, who "scattered the Alabama Tories over the country," killing 20, including two captains, the adjutant of the regiment and a lieutenant, and capturing the "two light steel guns," a large number of horses, many supplies, and 40 prisoners. Several days afterwards, according to Major-General Stephen D. Lee, C. S. A., stragglers were "still being caught over the countryside—all from the First Alabama Tory Regiment." When Major-General Sherman, at his Iuka, Mississippi headquarters, received news of the defeat, he swore under his breath at that "erratic Alabama regiment of ours, which had gone off on some recruiting or other errand" and been "worsted."¹⁹

¹⁸ ORA, 1, XXX(4), 118-119.

¹⁹ Ibid., 1, XXXI(1), 29-30, 37, 38, 692, 709, 763, 766. The Rebellion Record, VII, 66, 579-580, admitted Spencer "was attacked and defeated by rebel forces."

Thus ended the First Alabama Cavalry's second major encounter with the Confederate forces in North Alabama.

After their disastrous day at Jones's Crossroads the men of the First Alabama one way or another, singly and in disorganized groups, made their ways back to Dodge's headquarters at Camp Davies. And once again, while replacements were being sought and the regiment reorganized and further trained, the records of its activities were left blank.²⁰

Colonel Spencer, himself, was in early December temporarily transferred from the First Alabama on "detached service with Gen. Dodge at Pulaski, Tenn. in S. O. 313, Hd. Qrs. 16 A. C."²¹ His brief command of the Alabama Tories had, to say the least, brought him little or no credit—but within six months he was destined to return to the regiment.

Meanwhile, following Dodge's transfer from Corinth to Pulaski, the celebrated Brigadier-General Benjamin H. Grierson had been appointed Dodge's successor and he, in turn, had reassigned Colonel Mizner to command of the First Alabama Cavalry, now in the First Brigade.²²

Colonel Mizner reassumed his former position in the Alabama Tory regiment with something less than gleeful enthusiasm. Nevertheless, at daylight on November 26 he led his First Brigade, consisting of "400 men from the Third Michigan [Mizner's own regiment], 300 from the Seventh Kansas, and 200 from the First Alabama," out of Corinth, marched 31 miles and encamped near Blackland. From that point the brigade rode cautiously southward to Chesterville where, in order to avoid Lee's cavalry, it "moved to a safer position near Molino [and thence to] Ripley." Meanwhile, the 35 prisoners, who had been picked up along the way, had become "a burden." Looking about for a solution to the problem and seeing "the First Alabama . . . miserably mounted and wholly unequal to expected marches," Mizner ordered that regiment to escort the prisoners back to Corinth. Upon his return to headquarters Mizner filed a detailed report of the scouting expedition, declaring that "from sickness, after long exposure and loss of horses, I sent about 60 men to Corinth, also 30 men as escort to prisoners. The horses of the First Alabama, only 200 in all, were so poor that I was obliged to order them back to Corinth."²³

²⁰ ORA, 1, XXXI(1), 2-3, 573. The regiment was probably engaged in brief skirmishes on Nov. 2, 12, and 22, but the records are garbled.

²¹ "Special Orders 313, Hdqrs., 16th Army Corps. Memphis, Dec. 9, 1863; Col. George E. Spencer, 1st Regiment Alabama Cavalry, is hereby detached from Special Service and will without delay proceed via Cairo and Nashville to Pulaski, Tenn., there reporting for duty to Brig. Gen. G. M. Dodge, Comdg, Left Wing, 16th Army Corps. . . ." The order came directly from Maj. Gen. Grant through Maj. Gen. Hurlbut. Spencer remained on "detached service," serving as Dodge's chief-of-staff until July, 1864, at which time he rejoined the First Alabama (see below, n. 34).

As 1863 ended, the First Alabama Cavalry was in camp at Corinth, inactive, recuperating, and again seeking replacements. By mid-January 600 new Tories had been enlisted, bringing the total to 800, thanks to the recruiting activities of Brigadier-General Dodge, who, he declared, took a personal interest in signing up the "loyal men who flock to my lines. . . ."

But up to now, after more than a year's service, the "erratic regiment" had done nothing of which really to be proud. Indeed, it had accomplished little more than opening the door for other Alabama Tories who might wish to "come down out of the fastnesses" of their mountain hide-outs to seek aid and comfort with the winning side.²⁴ It had altogether proved a liability rather than an asset. Surely, the First Alabama had thus far added no prestige or glory to the United States Cavalry.

During the first four months of 1864 the main body of the First Alabama Cavalry remained in and about Memphis in Grierson's First Brigade, First Division, Sixteenth Army Corps, Army of the Tennessee, with Mizner as substitute colonel for Spencer, who had since December been on "detached service" with Dodge in Pulaski. From time to time the regiment or a picked patrol or perhaps a company from it was sent out on reconnaissance expeditions to Decatur, La Grange, Corinth, Hernando, Coldwater, Germantown, Mount Pleasant or other points, sometimes skirmishing with Confederate cavalry patrols. But the outfit lacked men, equipment and horses to "thoroughly mount the command." Not infrequently, because of the shortage of horses (the regiment had only 270 on March 20), the unmounted men were shifted from place to place by rail or water or assigned to the infantry. At least two "detached" units of the command were in these early months of the new year serving in Northeast Alabama, one with the Eleventh and one with the Fifteenth Army Corps.²⁵

On January 9 from his Tennessee headquarters Dodge, going over the heads of his superiors, wrote directly to Secretary of War Edwin M. Stanton, asking "authority to raise one or more regiments of cavalry from Alabamians." He claimed that he personally had recruited approximately one thousand men at Corinth in 1863 and had found the task easy:

There are large numbers [of Alabamians] coming in to our lines, and a better class of men than has ever come through before, being men who have furnished substitutes upon being drafted for the rebel service. Several of them are anxious to raise a regiment and have no doubt that [this can] easily be done. I recruited one regiment, at Corinth, Miss.—the First Alabama Cavalry, nearly 1,000 strong—and that fact being well known in North Alabama nearly all the refugees from there seek my lines. I also desire that authority to be given me to appoint the officers, most of which I would select from the old regiments now in service. My advance is opposite Decatur and at points on the [Tennessee] river easily reached from the Alabama mountains, from which these men seek my lines. We have to feed them, and it is no more than right that they should enter the service. Most of them are anxious to do so, but prefer to go into an organization of their own. An early response to this would be great benefit to the service.²⁶

There can be little doubt that Colonel Spencer was instrumental in persuading his superior to write this letter, for three days later Dodge wrote Major-General William T. Sherman in Memphis that,

If we could make lodgement at Decatur it would give an outlet to a large number of Union people who are seeking our lines and who would join our Alabama regiments, and if Colonel Spencer's First Alabama Cavalry could be ordered to me, it would form a nucleus that would soon give us another mounted regiment.²⁷

Again, on January 29, Dodge pleaded for authority to organize the "Alabama Yankees" who were seeking haven at his headquarters.

The rebel conscription [he wrote Adjutant-General T. S. Bowers] is driving into our lines a large number of Union men, who furnished substitutes, and men who have always stood by us and keep out of the rebel army by taking to the mountains. They desire to go into our service, and prominent men among them think they can raise a regiment. Can you authorize me to enlist them, and have a regiment to be known as the Second Alabama Cavalry? I raised and officered the First Alabama Cavalry at Corinth, now 800 strong, and I have no doubt I can raise another. These men flock to my lines from this fact.²⁸

Nothing came of Dodge's appeals, although there is no doubt that many Alabamians continued to file down out of the hills to the Union lines.

After one expedition in the direction of Larkin's Landing, thirty-odd miles east of Huntsville, hundreds "who had been secreted a great part of the time for two years . . . came out of the fastnesses of Sand Mountain." Some joined the cavalry, others enlisted in various infantry regiments. One Tory, McCurdy by name, was described by Brigadier-General Morgan L. Smith as having been so enthusiastic as to muster a company of his own "with a pencil on brown paper, christen it, assume command . . . , advance into Sand Mountain and actually make captures of rebel Home Guards in the same hiding places they had themselves just vacated."

The loyal Alabamians are invaluable [Smith continued] and exceed in number and are equal in zeal to anything we discovered in Tennessee The results of the expedition I considered important. Many of the Home Guards, including one officer, have resumed their allegiance by taking the amnesty oath, and the always-loyal people of this part of Alabama have learned from the general good conduct of the men who their real friends are. . . .²⁹

Small squads of Brigadier-General Nathan Bedford Forrest's Confederate cavalymen likewise raided the Sand Mountain area, now and then "capturing some of the First Alabama Cavalry"—Alabamians versus Alabamians, neighbors versus neighbors in what might have been described as a local feud rather than a small segment of a massive international conflict of arms.

On March 24 the First Alabama Cavalry, "one-half of the regiment dismounted," were ordered by Grierson from Memphis to Decatur, a distance of 250 miles. Because of the poor physical condition of the men and horses, however, the regiment was moved 600 miles on the steamer Westmoreland—northward up the Mississippi via Cairo, eastward up the Ohio via Paducah, thence southeastward up the Cumberland to Nashville. From Nashville the regiment marched overland to their destination at Mooresville, in North Alabama, arriving April 14.³⁰

Meanwhile, in the extreme northeastern corner of Alabama, across the state from their comrades at Memphis, another detachment of Alabama cavalry was in the making. On February 6 from Scottsboro Major-General John A. Logan, commanding the Fifteenth Army Corps, wrote Brigadier-General John A. Rawlins, his chief-of-staff,

I leave for Huntsville this morning and Decatur as rapidly as possible. A great many Alabamians in the country desire to enlist in the Alabama regiment. They have shown themselves very useful men. If I had authority I could fill the regiment and use them to a good purpose. They are the best scouts I ever saw, and know the country well clear to Montgomery.³¹

Almost simultaneously, another detachment of the First Alabama was serving with the First Brigade, Third Division, Eleventh Army Corps, in the vicinity of Caperton's Ferry, near Bridgeport, Alabama. A scouting party from this unit was sent out March 28 "to ascertain the truth as to the presence of enemy." Within twenty-four hours it came into contact with a contingent of Confederate cavalrymen, fired a few rounds—and fled. The Confederates chased the Tories back "to within three miles" of their camp. Colonel James S. Robinson, of the Eighty-second Ohio Infantry, who was commanding the expedition, evidently suspicious, wrote:

A patrol from the First Alabama Cavalry, which returned at 5 p.m. on yesterday [March 27], reported themselves to have been driven back from Caperton's Ferry to Island Creek by a detachment of about 50 rebel cavalry. They declared that they exchanged shots with scattering bushwhackers . . . and that the enemy suddenly afterward appeared in such numbers as to compel the retreat of the cavalry. Upon receipt of this news I immediately dispatched a detachment of 10 men and a lieutenant . . . with orders to patrol the road This patrol returned at 7 a.m. this morning. The lieutenant commanding reported that he went as far as within 4 miles of Caperton's Ferry without seeing the enemy, and that he could not learn that they had been in the vicinity during the previous day, thus partly contradicting the story of the Alabama cavalry patrol. . . .

When Major-General O. O. Howard relayed Robinson's message on to headquarters, he neatly explained that the First Alabama had "come in contact with about fifty rebel cavalry and exchanged shots with them. The rebels followed them to within three miles of camp, near Bridgeport."³²

Meanwhile, Dodge's headquarters had again been moved, this time from Pulaski to Athens, Alabama. Colonel Spencer moved with his superior. One of Dodge's first communiques, dated April 6 and addressed to Major-General J. B. McPherson at Huntsville, once more reflected his interest in recruiting North Alabama Tories. There was now a virtual "cavalry picket line" extending across the state from Guntersville to Courtland "to catch the deserters and refugees seeking our lines," he wrote. "The mountains are full of them, and they hold the mountain district in spite of all efforts of the rebels to catch them. I know of several companies of at least 100 men, each led by our scouts and members of the First Alabama Cavalry."³³

As the month of April, 1864 came to a close, Sherman's "desperate campaign" for Atlanta began to take shape. Late in March the Secretary of War, acting under the order of President Abraham Lincoln, had appointed Lieutenant-General Ulysses S. Grant general-in-chief of the reorganized United States Army, replacing Major-General H. W. Halleck. Simultaneously, Sherman had been assigned command of the Military Division of the Mississippi, now composed of the Departments of the Ohio, the Arkansas, the Cumberland, and the Tennessee. Of the last-named Major-General John A. Logan was placed in command. It contained the Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Seventeenth Army Corps—132,508 officers and men, among whom, in the Sixteenth Corps,

Major-General Stephen A. Hurlbut commanding, was Brigadier-General Grenville M. Dodge's First Alabama Cavalry, temporarily led by Major George L. Godfrey. (Colonel George E. Spencer was still on "detached duty" as Dodge's chief-of-staff.)³⁴

On April 15 the First Alabama was on scouting duty along the Tennessee River at Triana. Two weeks later, in company with the Ninth Illinois, it moved northward towards Huntsville, then eastward towards Stevenson. Another two weeks found the two regiments, now joined by others, slowly working their devious ways across the Coosa River to Cedartown, Dallas, and Rome, Georgia—their destination (as was the destination of the entire Left Wing of the Sixteenth Army Corps) Burnt Church Crossroads, some forty miles northwest of Atlanta. The Ninth Illinois served as an advance guard, while the First Alabama rode the flanks. Between them were mostly ordnance trains, supply trains, and ambulances. Up to now, June 20, the regiments had not come in contact with the enemy except in brief inconsequential skirmishes on patrols.³⁵

Colonel Spencer, who had been absent from the regiment for several months, returned to active duty in early July. Under his leadership the First Alabama retraced its route through Rome, Gadsden, and Guntersville, rear-guarding railroad supply lines and scouting against the enemy. Upon its return to Rome the regiment was sent out on foraging parties (feed for horses, mostly) across the Chattooga River and elsewhere, during which it picked up a few prisoners. In early August it reached back westward again, this time to Cedartown, Cave Spring, Blue Mountain (now Anniston), Jacksonville, and as far south as Tallapoosa

³⁴ Ibid., 1, XXXII(3), 58, 87, 561-566. Spencer had moved from Pulaski to Athens with Dodge. He was in Decatur on March 22-23 and at Mooresville on Apr. 17, 1864 (ibid., 1, XXXII[3], 391, 450). According to the "Regimental Returns," he did not return to the First Alabama until July, 1864. Between Apr. and July, according to the "Muster Roll of General and Staff and Detached Men," May-June, 1864, he was absent from duty because of sickness (see above, n. 21).

County, Alabama where it "destroyed a quantity of corn and wheat [and] burned a steam cotton factory."³⁶

By September the Confederates under Brigadier-General James H. Clanton, including the First Alabama Cavalry, C. S. A., had somehow managed to work themselves up to Etowah, wedging themselves between Cedartown and Cave Spring—and the First Alabama Cavalry, U. S. A., was sent out to "follow them." But their leader, Lieutenant-Colonel Godfrey (who had recently been promoted from major) "saw nothing, neither could they hear of any Rebel force in that direction." As September passed into October the Tories continued their monotonous routine of scouting, foraging, guarding bridges and railroads, now to Summer-ville, now Cedar Bluff, now Dirt Town, now Coosaville, but always circling back to headquarters at Rome. On October 4 the entire regiment was ordered to move to Kingston, 20 miles southeast of Rome on the Cartersville road, "supplied with three days' rations." A week later, "feeling for the enemy" in the direction of Cave Spring, the "Alabama Yankees" "ran into a picket . . . [and] were compelled to fall back," although from local citizens they gathered "valuable information." Wrote Brigadier-General John M. Corse, "I am largely indebted to the activity and gallantry of the First Alabama Cavalry in procuring information for me [about General John B. Hood's movements in Northeast Georgia and Northwest Alabama] since [arriving] here." Sherman likewise acknowledged his debt to the scouting activities of the First Alabama during the campaign for Atlanta.³⁷

³⁶ Ibid., 1, XXXVIII(1), 89, 107. In the reorganization of forces for the Atlanta Campaign (May 3-Sept. 8) the First Alabama Cavalry, under Spencer, was assigned to the Sixteenth Army Corps, Dodge commanding. Returns from the Army of the Tennessee, July, 1864, list Spencer's cavalry as numbering 756 men "in the field"; the August returns, 773 (ibid., 1, XXXVIII[5], 317, 743). On October 30 the First Alabama Cavalry, Colonel Spencer commanding, was transferred to the Army of the Tennessee (Right Wing, Major-General O. O. Howard) and the next day moved with the Seventeenth Army Corps (Major-General Frank P. Blair, Jr.) southward from Rome via Cedartown to Marietta, arriving November 5. The corps remained at Marietta eight days and then, by-passing Atlanta, circled toward Milledgeville (which surrendered on November 20), destroying its railroad and depot. En route, however, the Tories had become so wantonly destructive of personal property as to cause Major-General Howard, at his headquarters "In the Field, Ga.," to direct his adjutant to write Colonel Spencer:

Colonel: The major-general commanding directs me to say to you that the outrages committed by your command during the march are becoming so common, and are of such an aggravated nature, that they call for some severe and instant mode of correction. Unless the pillaging of houses and wanton destruction of property by your regiment ceases at once, he will place every officer in it under arrest, and recommend them to the department commander for dishonorable dismissal from the service.

Evidently, Howard was unaware of the fact that his commander, William T. Sherman, had personally ordered the First Alabama Cavalry to "Burn the country within fifteen miles . . .," an order which had made even Dodge wince because he "knew what that meant; it was a license under which other things besides burning could be done."³⁸

No mention of the First Alabama's outrages were recorded in its own "Regimental Returns," however. At the end of November, as the Seventeenth Army Corps crossed the Ogeechee River between Gordon and Millen, the scribe summed up the month's activities in these few words:

³⁸ Ibid., 1, XLIV, 504-505; Dodge, 179. See ORA, 1, XLIV, 32-33 for the exact itinerary of the Seventeenth Army Corps, First Division, commanded by Maj. Gen. Skirmishing with Wheeler's (Rebel) Cav. up to the 11th when it broke Camp and moved in the direction of Atlanta, Ga. arriving there the evening of the 14th. Was there assigned to duty with the 17 A. C. Took the advance of the Corps and moved on the 15th in a southeasterly direction and kept the advance. Had several brisk skirmishes with the enemy at every point with slight loss. Continued in the advance of the Corps until the last of the month.

Between December 1-7 the Seventeenth Corps, now east of the Oconee, advanced southward towards Savannah, destroying the Georgia Central Railroad and bridges as it went and skirmishing occasionally with the enemy. On December 18 the corps encamped at Midway Congregational Church in Liberty County,³⁹ tearing up an 18-mile stretch of the Atlantic and Gulf Railroad and its trestles and bridges across the Altamaha River. Three days later, upon receiving word that Savannah had fallen, Major-General Blair marched his troops through the conquered city and pitched camp three miles east. After Christmas he established his command headquarters at Fort Thunderbolt, a former Confederate stronghold on the Wilmington River, five miles south of the city.

As 1864 came to a close, Major-General Sherman reviewed his victorious armies as they paraded through the streets of Savannah—the First Alabama Cavalry forming “on Price Street with its right resting on Bay Street.”⁴⁰

On the night of December 31 the First Alabama's scribe wrote:

Regiment left Millen, Ga. the 1st of the month moving down the Ga. Central R.R. in advance of the 17th AC having a brisk skirmish on the 4th at Bush Head Creek. Had slight skirmish every day until the 9th, when we came to the enemy's outer works at Savannah. We drove them two miles over a road where torpedoes were buried, which exploding mortally wounded Adjutant Tupper and six men slightly, also killing six horses. We drove the enemy to their main works when the Inft. and Artillery came to our assistance, we guarding the flanks until the 13th, when the Regt. moved with the 1st Div 17th AC to destroy the Gulf RR. Returned to camp on the 21st and moved into Savannah 22nd. Go into Camp four miles South of the City at Thunderbolt Battery, where we [are] at this time living without rations for men or forage for animals, on account of which a number of horses have died and men have suffered extremely.⁴¹

And thirty-five years later, with tongue in cheek, former Captain Mortimer R. Flint, Company E, First Alabama Cavalry, reminiscing before the Minnesota Commandery of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, declared,

. . . of the 1st Alabama Cavalry, of which regiment, by the way, I have heard delicate hints, that seemed to me at the time were intended to convey a suspicion that they believed in the axiom, that self-preservation is the first law of nature and so preserved themselves for the good of their country, by never going hungry in that of the enemy.

I cannot vouch for this from personal knowledge, for although I had the honor of belonging to the regiment, was most of the time absent on staff duty; but this I do believe, that being mostly southern men, they enjoyed a special faculty of divining the most likely locality that a southern rebel would choose for secreting provisions and to be strictly just and truthful, I never knew a 1st Alabamian who would not share with a rebel sympathizer when that locality was discovered; as to the proportion that the rebel got—well, you know how that was yourselves.

⁴¹ According to Maj. Gen. Howard, between Oct. 4-Dec. 31, 1864 the Seventeenth Corps had "set free" 3,000 Negroes, captured 666 prisoners, burned 3,523 bales of cotton, confiscated 10,500 cattle (of which 9,000 had been eaten), 931 horses, 1,850 mules, 4,500,000 pounds of corn, 4,500,000 pounds of fodder, and destroyed 191 miles of railroad (ibid., 1, XLIV, 76).

The 1st Alabama cavalry was composed mostly of men from the northern portion of that state and their love and devotion for the union and the old flag, was not excelled by any who wore the blue.

They were terribly in earnest and the story of their privations and sufferings for the cause that they espoused, can never be fully described.⁴²

Following their victorious march through Georgia, Sherman's forces were reorganized. In January, 1865 the Seventh Army Corps was merged into the Tenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Twentieth, and Twenty-third, and a new Third Cavalry Division, composed of four brigades, was created and placed under the leadership of Brigadier-General Judson Kilpatrick.⁴³ The Third Brigade, commanded by Colonel Spencer, included the First Alabama Cavalry (Major Francis L. Cramer and Captain Jerome J. Hinds), the Fifth Kentucky, the Fifth Ohio, and the Thirteenth Pennsylvania, altogether 5,068 men.⁴⁴ Kilpatrick's first command to the First Alabama (and the Ninth Illinois), written "Near Savannah," ordered them to report with their wagon trains for supplies and "bring ammunition, as we expect to have a little fight. . . ."⁴⁵

The First Alabama, now numbering 18 officers and 292 men, departed Fort Thunderbolt with the Third Cavalry Division on January 28.⁴⁶ Five days later the troopers crossed the Savannah River into South Carolina, driving one of Major-General "Fightin' Joe" Wheeler's brigades ahead of it, and "laid the town of Barnwell in ashes, in spite of every effort of Brigadier-General Kilpatrick to prevent it." At Blacksville the Third Brigade destroyed the tracks of the South Carolina Railroad and advanced northward towards Columbia, the state capital. On February 7-8, near Williston, the brigade engaged the enemy in a "spirited fight, in which six regiments of Brigadier-General William W. Allen's division of Wheeler's cavalry . . . were totally routed."

Colonel Spencer alone conducted the fight [Kilpatrick wrote] displaying much skill and great gallantry. Several hundred stand of arms were abandoned by the enemy and left scattered along the road. One officer and many men were killed and a large number wounded. Several prisoners were taken. Colonel Spencer pressed the enemy so close for a distance of seven or eight miles that he was finally forced to leave the roads and scatter through the woods and swamps in order to escape. Colonel Spencer brought back as trophies from the fight five battle flags. . . .

Major Sanford Tramel likewise praised Spencer's "rout" of the Confederates as "the most complete I ever witnessed. Guns, sabres, canteens, haversacks, saddle-bags, hats, and everything which would impede the flight of the affrighted and flying enemy were abandoned and completely strewn over the ground. . . . The conduct of the officers and men of my regiment on this occasion was praiseworthy in the highest degree. The loss of the regiment was four men wounded, one mortally, who afterward died."

After reading Tramel's account, Spencer himself described the Williston fight, using almost the same words:

Then commenced one of the most thorough and complete routs I ever witnessed. The ground was completely strewn with guns, haversacks, &c. Five battle-flags were captured, including the brigade and four regimental flags, and a large number of horses and over thirty prisoners. After a charge of about seven miles from this point the enemy dispersed and went in every direction through the woods. . . . The force we had the encounter with proved to be the Alabama brigade of Allen's division, Wheeler's cavalry corps, commanded by Colonel [James] Hagan, and consisting of the First, Third, Fifth, Ninth, Twelfth, and Fifty-First Regiments of Alabama Cavalry.⁴⁷

On February 11 the First Alabama Tories resumed their march northward, participating "in all the different scenes through which it passed, crossing the Edisto, Saluda, Broad, Wateree, and Great Pee Dee Rivers, via Lexington, Alston, Black Storks, Lancaster, and Sneedsborough, nothing of special importance occurring." Activities for the month were summed up in the "Regimental Returns" thus:

In the Field, S. C., except Co. H. On the 3d inst. the Regiment being connected with the 3d Brig. 3d Cav. Div. Mil. Dis. Miss. started from Sister's Ferry Ga. on the Campaign through the Carolinas. Continued with the Brigade until the last of the month. Participated in all the hardships which Gen'l Kilpatrick's Cavalry was exposed to, often working all night crossing the numerous almost impassible swamps and streams. Was engaged with the enemy at various points, sustaining but little loss. Both officers and men have conducted themselves in all their arduous duties in the most noble and creditable manner.

The First Alabama crossed over into North Carolina on March 7, reaching Monroe's Crossroads two days later. At sunrise the next morning, according to Major Tramel, the regiment was suddenly "aroused from sleep by the whistling of bullets and the fiendish yelling of the enemy, who were charging into our camp." A "bloody hand-to-hand conflict" followed, lasting more than three hours. At last, the Fifth Kentucky and the Fifth Ohio rushed to the rescue and "in connection . . . we succeeded in driving the enemy from our camps." Later it was learned that the enemy had consisted of three divisions of Confederate cavalry, led personally by Generals Wheeler and Wade Hampton.

During the brief but fierce affray both Majors Cramer and Tramel were captured, leaving the First Alabama in command of Captain Jerome J. Hinds—but Tramel soon escaped and, “after three days lying in the swamps and traveling nights,” succeeded in rejoining his command.⁴⁸ Colonel Spencer’s description of the early morning skirmish was complete:

Simultaneously on the morning of the 10th of March with our reveille the camp of the dismounted men and our camp was charged by three divisions of the enemy’s cavalry, viz, Butler’s, Hume’s, and Allen’s, General Hampton personally leading the charge of Butler’s division and General Wheeler leading the charge on the right with Hume’s division. The camp of the dismounted men was instantly captured; also the headquarters of the division and brigade, and with the wagons and artillery. In the cavalry camp the firing became very severe, and for a time the enemy gained and held nearly two-thirds of their camp, when, by desperate fighting behind trees, the men succeeded in driving the enemy entirely out of camp and partially away from the headquarters. About this time Lieutenant Stetson succeeded in creeping stealthily to his section of artillery and unlimbered one of his guns and fired upon the enemy. This was a rallying signal for the entire command, and immediately a sufficient force was placed in support of the battery and a withering and deadly fire of grape and canister was opened upon the enemy. Three successive charges were made by the enemy to recapture our artillery, but each charge was unsuccessful and cost them dearly.

About 7.30 the enemy retreated in confusion, leaving their dead and wounded in our hands. One hundred and three of the enemy’s dead were left on the field, also a large number of wounded and about thirty prisoners. Our men were too much exhausted and fatigued to follow the enemy, and nearly all were out of ammunition. For two hours and a half three small regiments, numbering in the aggregate less than 800 men, had successfully resisted the oft-repeated charges of three entire divisions numbering not less than 5,000 men. We remained on the field of battle till 3 p.m., burying the dead and taking care of the wounded, when we moved about five miles in the direction of Fayetteville, and joined the other two brigades and camped for the night. Our loss at the battle of Monroe's Cross-roads was 18 killed, 70 wounded, and 105 missing.

Among the killed and wounded were some of the best officers of the command. Adjutant Mitchell, of the Fifth Kentucky, was killed. The First Alabama Cavalry lost eight officers, including both of its field officers, Major Cramer being both wounded and a prisoner.

It is impossible for me to speak in too high terms of the conduct of the officers and men of my command in this fight, and it would be invidious to mention any, although I cannot let the gallant conduct of Lieutenant Stetson go without mention, who, unaided and alone, crept through the ranks of the enemy and unlimbered and fired one of his guns. To this fact, more than to any other, I ascribe a terrible disaster turned into a brilliant victory.⁴⁹

After Monroe's Crossroads the First Alabama once more moved with the Third Brigade. On March 16 near Averasborough, the regiment briefly skirmished with the enemy, but in the decisive Battle of Bentonville, March 19-21, took no part, except to "guard the left flank."

As the Campaign of the Carolinas ended, the Third Cavalry Brigade—that is, the First Alabama, the Fifth Kentucky, and the Fifth Ohio regiments—went into camp on March 24 at Faison's Depot, North Carolina.

In 55 days the brigade had marched more than seven hundred miles, crossing seven large rivers and many small streams. It had suffered 179 casualties: killed, 26 officers and men; wounded, 85; captured, 68. It alone had captured 207 prisoners and with the division had shared in the destruction of 80 railroad bridges, 200,000 bales of cotton, 411 cotton gins, 170 saw-mills, and 70 grist-mills, to say nothing of rolling stock, water tanks, wagon shops, and countless quantities of miscellaneous supplies.

Colonel Spencer generously thanked all commands of the Third Brigade "for their energy and zeal upon every occasion," but Major Tramel, besides presenting a brief chronology of the activities of the First Alabama Cavalry, stated simply that the regiment had during the campaign "captured something over 100 prisoners and over 200 horses. . . ." Captain John Latty, Company C; First Lieutenant George W. Emerick, Company A; and First Lieutenant Joseph H. Hornback, Company K, and four enlisted men had been killed in action, he added. Major Cramer, Second Lieutenant George C. Jenkins, Company M, and 28 men had been wounded, and Surgeon J. G. C. Swaving, First Lieutenant John P. Moore, Company E, and 46 men had been captured. Of horses, he concluded, 215 had been lost—"some by being captured, others by being worn out and abandoned."

At his field headquarters near Mount Olive, Major-General Kilpatrick was jubilant. On March 22, after visiting Major-General Sherman, "our great chief," he issued this special circular to the men in the Third Cavalry Division:

The campaign is over and we are promised rest. . . . This day I met our great chief on the field of battle, amid the dead and dying of our enemy, who has again fled before our proud, advancing banners, and my ears were made to tingle with the grateful words of praise spoken in admiration of the cavalry.

Soldiers, be proud! Of all the brave men of this army you have a right to be. You have won the admiration of our infantry, fighting on foot and mounted, and you will receive the outspoken words of praise from the great Sherman himself. He appreciates and will reward your patient endurance of hardships, gallant deeds, and valuable services.

With the old laurels of Georgia entwine those won in the Carolinas, and proudly wear them.

General Sherman is satisfied with his cavalry.

Within one week after General Joseph E. Johnston's surrender of the Army of Tennessee (April 26, at Greensboro, N. C.), the First Alabama Cavalry, now commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel George L. Godfrey and Major Tramel, was briefly attached to the Department of North Carolina, Army of the Ohio. In mid-April the regiment had moved from Faison's Depot to Raleigh to Durham to Hillsboro, where it had "remained during the negotiations and armistice between Gens Sherman and Johnson [sic], and the final surrender of Johnson [sic] until the last of the month."⁵⁰ On May 4 Sherman ordered the regiment to Knoxville to report to Major-General George A. Thomas, commanding the Department of the Cumberland, and afterwards to "march without delay" to the Huntsville-Decatur area "to assist in keeping the District of Northern Alabama."⁵¹ Moving by way of Hillsboro, Greensboro, Salisbury (where it remained a week shoeing horses), Lincolnton, Rutherfordton, Asheville, and Bull's Gap, the regiment arrived at Knoxville on the last day of May. As the regimental scribe reported for the month, "the 400 miles passed over [were] some very rocky and mountainous country, but as a general thing the roads were good. Forage was very scarce so much so that the animals were compelled to travel seven days without any grain, and being very poor when the march was commenced, a great many were wore out and abandoned. The men are in good health but are in great need of pay and clothing."⁵²

The First Alabama left Knoxville June 2. Passing through Bridgeport, Stevenson, and Larkinsville it arrived in Huntsville June 14 and reported to Major-General Robert S. Granger, commanding the District of Northern Alabama. At this time the regiment was re-joined by Colonel Spencer, who had been on leave since April because of "important private business involving the loss of a large sum of money" that required his personal attention.⁵³

Within a few days three companies of the Tories were sent across the Tennessee to Courtland and three to Moulton. The four others remained in Huntsville, where they were soon joined by their comrades-in-arms, the Fourth Alabama Colored Infantry, which had been organized at Decatur on March 31, 1864. Together these Alabamians, white and black, were assigned the duty—as occupational troops—of policing their own neighbors, both friend and foe.⁵⁴

On July 5 at Huntsville the regimental reporter wrote that Companies B, C, E, F, G, and M were bivouacked in that town and that all others, except H and K (unaccounted for) were at Moulton. A month later all companies, except B, H, and M, were at Courtland. Company M was at Pikesville (Marion County), and H—the lost company, which had somehow got separated from the regiment in South Carolina or North Carolina back in January, 1865—was at Blountsville.⁵⁵

Colonel Spencer resigned as colonel of the First Alabama on July 5, "the war being practically ended and my private business demanding my immediate attention." He added, "I have been in service nearly four years, and as long as there was an enemy in arms against the government I was willing to sacrifice every other interest to the public good. I now believe my duty requires me to bestow my entire time and attention to my private affairs." His resignation was immediately accepted and on August 22 he was appointed "Brigadier-General by Brevet of the Volunteer Force, Army of the United States for gallant, and meritorious services during the Campaign through Georgia and the Carolinas."⁵⁶

⁵³ Spencer's letter, dated "Near Mt. Olive, N. C. March 26, 1865," and his grant of leave, approved by Kilpatrick and Sherman on Apr. 7, is filed with the First Alabama's "Regimental Returns."

Copies of these communications are filed with the "Regimental Returns."

Epilogue

ON CHRISTMAS DAY 1889, a quarter-century after the close of the War Between the States, an unidentified veteran of Company L listed for the Washington National Tribune the whereabouts of some thirty-odd "brave boys" of his old regiment, the First Alabama Cavalry, U. S. A. Major Francis L. Cramer, he stated, had not been heard of since the war; Major Sanford Tramel was in Kansas, "trying for a pension"; Captain Mortimer J. Flint was a newspaperman in Fargo, South Dakota; and so on—but of Major-General Grenville M. Dodge, of Massachusetts, he wrote nothing and of George E. Spencer, of New York, he knew only that after Appomattox the Brigadier-General had been elected to the United States Senate from Alabama and was "now mining in Nevada."¹

After having been wounded in the Battle of Atlanta, Major-General Dodge visited General Ulysses S. Grant, who praised his accomplishments, and through him secured an audience with President Lincoln. In November, 1864 Dodge returned to active duty, later fighting Indians in the West. He resigned from the army in May, 1866 to become chief engineer of the Union Pacific Railroad, a position he held until January, 1870. The next year he accepted a similar post with the Texas and Pacific, resigning two years later to become an associate of Jay Gould in other railroad developments of the West and Southwest. He was in one way or another interested in the Denver, Texas, and Fort Worth and the Denver, Texas and Gulf roads and in 1892-1893 he served briefly as president of the Union Pacific, Denver and Gulf. After the Spanish-American War Dodge helped organize the Cuban Railroad Company which by 1903 had completed a line from Santa Clara to Santiago. Indeed, in half a century his surveys totalled more than sixty thousand miles, making him one of the world's foremost railroad engineer-builders.

In his last years Dodge devoted a great deal of interest and time to patriotic organizations, such as the Society of the Army of the Tennessee and the Military Order of the Loyal Legion, and to public speaking and writing. He was the author of The Battle of Atlanta and Other Campaigns . . . (Council Bluffs, 1910) and Personal Recollections of President Abraham Lincoln, General Ulysses S. Grant, and General William T. Sherman (Council Bluffs, 1914). He died in Council Bluffs, Iowa on January 3, 1916.²

Brigadier-General Spencer, capitalizing on his war-time career in North Alabama, moved to Decatur in 1866 and began the practice of law. That he succeeded rapidly is not surprising. A Republican who advocated Radical Reconstruction, he soon won political favor—the first evidence of which was his appointment in May, 1867 as register in bankruptcy by Chief Justice Salmon Portland Chase. In the wake of General Grant's election to the presidency in November, 1868 Spencer's progress accelerated to the point that he was generally recognized as one of the leading, if not the leading Carpetbag politician in Alabama. As one historian has aptly put it, "Spencer was shrewd, coarse and unscrupulous, and soon secured control of the Federal patronage in Alabama."³ In that year, 1868, by controlling Negro and Scalawag votes and by spending thousands of dollars, he was elected Republican senator—a post to which he was reelected for a second term in 1872.

However, by 1875 the Republican party in Alabama had been split into two irreconcilable factions—one, led by former Reconstruction Governor William H. Smith, a deserter from the Confederate Army, the other by Senator

Spencer and a Scalawag congressman from Greene County, Alabama named Charles Hays. In the elections of 1875 the Democrats overwhelmed the Republicans by choosing George Smith Houston as governor over David P. Lewis and by promptly ridding the state of 17 Republicans in the House and eight in the Senate, including all Negroes, except one. After 1876 many Alabama Republicans deserted their party—now that they had been denied “the spoils of the office.” Those who remained in the state came more and more to represent the blacks against the whites. For four elections after 1876 no Republican ticket appeared in the state elections and the party slowly became a mere mockery of its former days. By 1880 one astute Northerner observed that the reason for the party’s downfall had been “due to the generally poor quality of party members . . . , who were primarily interested in holding federal jobs.”⁴

As for Senator Spencer, in 1872, when he was striving to succeed himself, his real troubles began. He was assured of a majority of the Radicals (for he controlled the Negro votes), but most Scalawags, who had now begun to see the light, opposed him. Fearful of defeat, Spencer sought the aid of Former Provisional Governor Lewis E. Parsons (an appointee of President Andrew Johnson, and now the Moses of the Radicals), who “concocted a scheme for electing Spencer . . . worthy of New York ward politics,” but it had the “heartly approval” of both Governor David P. Lewis, a Confederate deserter, and, of course, President Grant. In the main, the fantastic scheme provided for the organization of two Alabama legislatures! Grant hurried to the rescue by sending United States troops to Montgomery and somehow, when the smoke had cleared, Spencer found himself reelected United States senator and Lewis had himself a completely Scalawag legislature, except for one lone Carpetbagger and one Negro.

Under Governor Lewis the Radical government of Alabama began rapidly to deteriorate, however. As Walter L. Fleming wrote in 1905, ⁴ Allen J. Goings, Bourbon Democracy in Alabama, 1874-1880 (University, Ala., 1951), 52.

The enormous issues of bonds, fraudulent and otherwise, by Smith and Lewis which destroyed the credit of the state; ignorant negroes in public office; drunken judges on the benches; convicts as officials; teachers and school officers unable to read; intermarriage of whites and blacks declared legal by the supreme court; the low character of the Federal officials; constant arrests of respectable whites for political purposes; use of Federal troops; packed juries; purchase and sale of offices; defaulters in every Radical county; riots instigated by the Radical leaders; heavy taxes,—all these burdens bore to the ground the Lewis administration before the end of its term. The last year was simply a standstill while the whites were preparing to overthrow the Radical government, which was demoralized and disabled also by constant aid and interference from the Federal administration.⁵

In 1875 both the Democratic and the Radical elements of the Alabama legislature, now united in their disgust of Senator Spencer's nefarious activities, conjointly addressed the United States Senate, asking that his seat be declared vacant. The charges against Spencer were 31 in number, but chiefly they concerned such "corrupt practices" as vote-buying, bribery, conspiracy, and—in unison with an old comrade of the First Alabama Cavalry, former Captain Jerome J. Hinds, one of the most disliked Carpetbaggers in Alabama—misappropriating state funds.⁶ One other charge stated that Spencer had caused a member of the Alabama House of Representatives "to be drugged with some narcotic drug, until he was deprived of reason, and the power of locomotion and speech for several days, and his life was nearly destroyed."⁷

⁶ Jerome J. and Joseph M. Hinds, of Illinois, both served in the First Alabama Tory Cavalry. After the war they settled in Decatur, Ala. and became quite well-to-do. Joseph was United States consul to Brazil, 1872-1878. See Thomas M. Owen, History of Alabama and Dictionary of Alabama Biography (Chicago, 1921), III, 815, and Fleming, 750.

⁷ Charges and Specifications Preferred by the State of Alabama Against George E. Spencer, and Submitted to the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections (Montgomery, 1875?), 1-15; Fleming, 760, n. 1.

Nevertheless, Spencer remained in the United States Senate his full twelve years, serving until March 3, 1879—conspicuous as the only Republican reelected from a Southern state.

After 1879 Spencer was politically active in furthering legislation that reduced letter postage to two cents and in the prosecution that led to the exposure of “star-route” postal frauds. In 1881, doubtless with the aid of Major-General Dodge, he was appointed a commissioner of the Union Pacific Railroad. Subsequently, he settled in Nevada where he spent the last years of his life as a rancher and mine prospector. He died in Washington, D. C. on February 19, 1893.⁸

⁸ Oddly enough, both of Spencer's wives were authors. The first, Bella Zilfa, an Englishwoman, wrote Ora, the Lost Wife (1864), Tried and True: A Story of the Rebellion (1866), and Surface and Depth (1867). Ten years after her death in Tuscaloosa, Ala. in 1867, Spencer married Miss William (“Major”) Loring Nunez, niece and namesake of Maj. Gen. William W. Loring, C. S. A., and author of Salt-Lake Fruit (1883), Story of Mary (1884), re-issued as Dennis Day, Carpet-Bagger (1887), A Plucky One (1887), and Calamity Jane (1887).
